NATIONAL IMMIGRATION LAW CENTER Fellowship Sponsorship Announcement

MAY 2009

The National Immigration Law Center invites third-year law students or judicial clerks to apply for NILC sponsorship of the Equal Justice Works, Skadden, or other fellowship beginning in the fall of 2010.

As a California-based national legal advocacy organization working for social justice, NILC's mission is to promote and advance the rights and opportunities of low-income immigrants and their families. Since 1979, NILC has established a national reputation for its expertise on immigration law and the public benefits and employment rights of low-income immigrants. We conduct policy and legal analysis, advocacy, class action and impact litigation, and provide training, publications, and technical assistance for a broad range of groups throughout the U.S., including immigrant rights coalitions, legal aid programs, community and faith-based groups, worker advocates, community and labor organizers, government agencies, policymakers, and the media.

NILC seeks fellowship applicants to work on a project benefiting low-income immigrants in one of NILC's priority areas: immigration law, including due process and access to lawful status; immigrant workers' rights and employment issues; and access to health care and public benefits. NILC will work closely with the selected applicant to ensure that the project proposal is integral to NILC's priorities and meets a core need in the immigrant community. The fellow will work out of either our Los Angeles or Washington, DC, offices. For more information on NILC, see www.nilc.org.

To apply, please submit a detailed cover letter describing your commitment to and experience in issues affecting low-income immigrants and to social and economic justice, as well as your proposed project idea, if you have one. Your cover letter should also address your motivation for pursuing a career in immigrants' rights.

Applications will be taken on a rolling basis, with priority given to those received by July 1, 2009. Please send the cover letter, résumé, transcript, a list of three references, and a writing sample to:
